

EPA recognizes city Xerox plant

Oklahoma City's Xerox production facility is the first Xerox site to be recognized by the Environmental Protection Agency for meeting the agency's guidelines.

The facility that employs 180 and makes toners, resins and binder tape was granted membership to EPA's National Environmental Performance Track Program in 2005.

The Performance Track Program awards facilities that voluntarily exceed regulatory requirements, implement systems for improving environmental management and set three-year environmental performance improvement goals.

Between 2003 and 2004 Xerox cut down its energy consumption by nearly 12 percent overall, according to the company's 2005 Environment, Health and Safety Progress Report, released Tuesday.
